THE CRONIN MYSTERY.

Alexander Sullivan, the Irish leader arrested for complicity in the murder of Dr. Cronin, is out on $20,000 bail, which ball may be increased if the grand jury having the case in hand find an indictment. This was to have been expected. The proof against Sullivan consists chiefly in the fact that he had apparent reason for wishing Cronin 'removed" and that the supposed mur derers are among Sullivan's henchmen. The judge, Tuley, before whom the application for a writ was brought, is one of the most respected in the northwest, one in whom all classes have confidence, and whose decision will be ac cepted as good sense and good law.

What Mr. Sullivan will have more difficulty with just now is to explain any business connection with Lester & Co., the stock brokers who attended to some of his business. Whence came the money said to have been lost in speculation?

It is evident that, while a strong moral case, implicating a number of people, has been made out before the Coroner's jury, and that the guilt of the Clan-na-Gael group is seemingly assured, yet so well have tracks been hidden that no one is yet certain to hang. More telling testimony may bring but half justice. The conspirators may not all be revealed. The ruffians, mere tools who did the mur der, may be convicted, and their masters may escape.

GUM-CHEWING IN WASHINGTON The Waterbury American declares that Washington is a city of gumchewers. Secretary Blaine, it says, chews gum, and Mrs. McKee and Mrs. Russell Harrison and Justice Gray and lots of other people, prominent politi-cally or socially. It gives no reason; it just makes the assertion.

The Waterbury American may or may not be justified in its declaration-THE CRITIC has no controverting data at hard-but this may at least be said, that the Washingtonian, when he or she chews, does it gracefully. There is slight visible movement of the rows or lips when the seductive mouthful is manipulated. It is not an obtrusive gum-chewing. It is artistic.

Gum-chewing per se is not a particubad habit. It is good for the teeth, and said to be by no means bad for the digestion. It is only when gum chewing is clumstly or ungracefully done that it is an objectionable practice, and, since the artistic prevails here, the arraignment of the Waterbury American may go for naught.

and will not pay as a waterway. It would be a good thing for Georgetown to have it repaired, but the cold logic of facts interenes against it. Still the Governmen should-look after such interests as it may bave in the concern. The United States Government is, next to the State of Maryand, the largest individual holder of canal stock, but there was no representative of the Government at the recent meeting of stockholders in Annapolis.

A SMALL BUT NOT altogether commendable industry appears to have been estab-lished in this city. Thieves of the meanest calibre remove the stamps from newspapers placed on letter-boxes for mailing. The capture and punishment of one or two of these would have a wholesome effect. The penalty is heavy enough to make the style of theft about the most risky possible.

UNDER THE VIOLETS Her hands are cold, her face is white;

No more her pulses come and go; Her eyes are shut to life and light; Fold the light vesture, snow on snow, And lay her where the violets blow,

But not beneath a graven stone, To plead for tears with alien eyes; A slender cross of wood alone Shall say that here a maiden lies In peace beneath the peaceful skies.

And gray old trees of hugest limb Shall wheel their circling shadows round. To make the scorehing sunlight dim That drinks the greenness from ground,

And drop their dead leaves on the mound For her the morning choir will sing Its matins from the branches high, And every minstrel voice of spring That thrills beneath the April sky, Shall greet her with its earliest cry.

At last the rootlets of the trees Shall find the prison where she lies, And bear the buried dust they seize In leaves and blossoms to the skies: So may the soul that warms it rise.

If any, born of kindlier blood, Should ask: "What maiden lies below?" Say only this: "A tender bud That tried to blossom in the snow Lies withered where the violets blow." OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,

THE TOWN'S PHOTOGRAPH.

The most practical people are dis-osed to regard the number thirteen posed to regard the number thirteen with a certain superstitlous respect. The experience of the officers of the The experience of the officers of the Ninth Precinct give color to the traditions of ill-lines supposed to accompany that number. Wm. H. Cutler is the officer who now has the number. His predecessor was Officer Marion, who died in the service some nine months ago. Of the three previous, one was shot by a negro on New Jersey avenue. Another was discharged because of disability and another was dismissed. The number has a record of death and dismissal under disagreeable circumstances. "It under disagreeable circumstances. "I has a record of disaster," is the way on officer puts it. The beat is in what is known as "Swampoedle." Notwith standing the forbidding history of the number, Officer Cutler is entirely satisfied with it. "I have been knocker down on an average of about once a month," he remarked, "but outside o saving money and making cases. I am saving money and making cases. I have held the number longer than any man who ever had it."

Postmaster General Wanamaker is not given to prating about what he does in the way of benevolence. A case in point is the following: Some months ago a little church out in Maryland was wrecked by a tornado. The congregation is not a wealthy one, and considerable difficulty was experienced in securing enough contributions to rebuild it. One of the ladies interested in the matter, having heard of Mr. Wanamaker's great Sunday-school, concluded to test his interest in the great cause of religion. She stated the case to him, saying that the lumber had been purchased and that money was needed only for putting it together. Without another word he opened his cheek book and wrote a check for $50. The incident has never before been printed.

Some time ago a great hue and cry was raised because Wanamaker & Brown of Philadelphia had sent out circulars to a number of postmasters. The Postmaster-General has nothing to do with the firm, but many people claimed that it was grossly improper for him to allow anything of the kind to be done by a firm bearing his name. Mr. Wanamaker is really very scrupu-Mr. Wanamaker is really very scrupu-lous about such matters. Connected with his establishment is a contract de partment which engages to furnish hotels, theatres and public buildings Upon Mr. Wanamaker's appointment he issued strict orders that no efforts should be made to secure Government contracts. Although the contracts would have been awarded on strict business principles to the lowest and most satisfactory bidder, he was un-willing to have business dealings with the Government while a me the Administration.

BOOKS AND WRITERS

Three Years. By Josephine Countess Scheverin. Translated from the German by Mary J. Safford. Published by Rand, McNally & Co., Chicago.

This is No. 98 of "The Globe Library," which is proving an interesting series of volumes. The German story by the well-known authoress is translated clearly and is something worth reading. The translation of this sort of stories is, by the way, a departure which the publishers of popular books may continue to great advantage. Some of the recent books of home authors have been very bad indeed. authors have been very bad indeed. The supply of books worth reading is near equal to the demand.

is of a nature to be interesting to the general reader, but the report of the Illinois Fish Commission for 1888, just wor central reader, out the report of the Rillinois Fish Commission for 1888, just out, forms an exception to the rule. The fisherman, especially of the Northwest, and the person interested in fish culture in any part of the country should have the work. To the fisherman it is valuable because it contains excellent illustrations of most of the game fish and has much about their ways and their habitat. To the fish propagator it is full of valua because it tells of the experiments of one of the most energetic and practical fish commissions in the United States. Mr. S. P. Bartlett of Quincy, who is the active member of the Illinois Commission, will accomplish only less good with the report than by his resolute and sensible labors.

THE OLD HOLLAND LOAN.

When Washington used to belong to the Dutch" is an expression long-time residents of Washington sometimes use and which often excites an inquiry as and which often excites an inquiry as to the aptriess of the phrase.

Now that it is destroyed and not unlikely to remain so, things relating to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal have an especial interest. This phrase is often used in speaking of the early history of the carly and are loves its origin to it. The the canal and owes its origin to it. The District of Columbia was at one time about the largest individual holder of canal securities and the canal's history is closely interwoven with that of this

From the memorable Fourth of July 1828—and as that day was Friday, peo-ple of certain tendencies may find con-firmation of their belief in Friday's firmation of their belief in Friday's reputation as a Jonah in this fact—the canal's history has been one of disaster. It was a great day, this Friday was. Georgetown then was the city of the District, after Alexandria, perhaps, and it was virtually the making of George town when the canal project was carried out. On this day of days for Georgetown President Adams and his Cabinet, Washington's city fathers and about all the dignitaries of the National Government went together over to Georgetown and were received by Georgetown and were received by Georgetown and the canal officers and board of directors. A procession was formed and after a parade that ended at the dock they all boarded a boat called the "Sunrise" and steamed up the river to a place four or five miles up the river to a place four or five miles above where the Aqueduct bridge used

Here the party landed, and going to a place on the shore where a mahogany stake had been driven into the ground, they marked the place where work on stake had been driven into the ground, they marked the place where work on the canal would begin. The president of the canal company made an address to the President of the United States, and the President of the United States made a speech to the president of the canal company. When the canal president finished his speech he handed President Adams a bran-new spade to be used in lifting the first spadeful of earth in the great work. As he talked, so the fathers of old residents used to tell them, President Adams leaned as gracefully on the spade as does a laborer working for $1.50 a day.

After the President of the United States finished his speech he planted the spade on the ground beside the Mahogany stake and put his foot on it to push it into the earth. It struck the root of a near-by tree and stopped. The President of the United States finished his speech he planted the spade on the ground, beside the Mahogany stake and put his foot on it to push it into the earth. It struck the root of a near-by tree and stopped. The President of the United States again tried to dig up a spadeful of earth and failed again. Then President John Quincy Adams threw down the spade onto the ground, squared his broad shoulders and took off his handsome coat and threw it on the ground with an air of determination that elicited salvo after salvo of cheers from the thousands of people who were about on the hills to witness the great event. Then to a chorus of the thundering plaudits of enthusiastic thousands President Adams dug up not one but a dozen spadeful of earth with an energy and celerity dug up not one but a dozen spadefuls of earth with an energy and celerity that spoke as much for his physique as for his interest in seeing the canal project well started.

An interesting thing about the Chesa-peake and Ohio Canal is that a part of it, near Great Falls, is the old Potomac Canal that was begun in 1784 and flu-ished a few years later, and the ma-sonry of this old canal, the locks, etc., are as solidly firm to-day, despite the flood, as the day they were built, over a Century ago.

But the great work that the President of the United States began on Friday morning never got on well and the canal morning never got on well and the canal projectors were always pushed for money. Washington people were interested in the proposed canal particularly because it crossed the centre of this city, intersecting the James Creek Canal that flowed past the foot of the Capitol in South Washington. This made an island of southwest Washington and even over it wainteins that made an island of southwest washing-ton and even now it maintains that name in local nomenclature. So it was that on May 24, 1828 Congress passed an act empowering the cities of Alex-andria, Georgetown and Washington, which were then all in the District of Columbia, to subscribe for $1,500,000. worth of canal stock between them. Alexandria and Georgetown were to each subscribe for 2,500 and Washington 10,000 shares at $100 per share.

can subscribe for 2,300 and Washington 10,000 shares at $100 per share.

The act authorized the three cities to borrow the money and issue bonds for the security of the debt, everybody seeming to think that the canal would prove so well-paying an investment that the debt would be quickly met after the canal was completed and began to pay dividends to stockholders.

Richard Rush, ex-Secretary of the Treasury was selected to float the loan. In those days Holland was noted for its big capitalists and these capitalists for their readiness to invest in American securities, so to Holland Mr. Rush looked as the place to float the loan. Real estate speculators had before this time borrowed lots of money in Holland, giving as security city lots here in Washington, so that Holland financiers' interests in Washington were then quite extensive. Mr. Rush made a trip to Holland and succeeded in placing the entire one-million-dollar loan with the Messrs. Crommelius of Amsterdam, one of the grand old-time banking-houses of those days.

The nullion was all dangued into the

those days.

The million was all dumped into the ditch, and for years people used to say: "Washington is owned by the Dutch." In 1886 Congress passed an act re-leving the District of this indebtedness The general Government took the stock and paid the debt to the Hollanders, and thus Washington ceased to be owned by the Dutch. This stock is still in the hands of the Solicitor of the Treusury. The old law, passed in 1828, under which the stock was bought, provided that the Government should have early votes and votes the first stock was bought, have equal voice and representation in the affairs of the canal with other shareholders. But at the meeting of canal stockholders in Annapolis this week the United States was entirely unrepre-sented. The United States holding of stock is larger than any other individual holding save Maryland's. The canal's prospects are now the gloomiest sort.

At the meeting it was developed that the canal was without money or credit.
Nothing can be done save by concerted action of the stockholders, bondholders and business men whose interests are affected by the canal. When so important matters are being considered and decided as were at the meeting in Annapolis, and as will be at the meeting next week, it seems that a party so largely interested as the Government is largely interested as the Government is should be represented.

There has been a hope that coal and mill men would help repair the present damage to the canal. A coal operator of Cumberland has announced that he would himself repair the canal for tweaty-two miles this side of Cumberland. Georgetown mill men would doubtless raise money enough to repair the Georgetown level of the canal, about four miles long; but even then there would be over 150 miles left. If this was done the 1847 bonds on the income are all still out.

But the Baltimers and Ohlo Baltroad.

But the Baltimore and Ohlo Rallroad offers by far, the greatest menace to th canal. This company owns $260,000 of the issue of $500,000 worth of bonds, secured by the canal itself. These bonds have interest coupons attached, to be detached as the interest becomes due and is paid. Whenever three pay ments are passed and three over-du ments are passed and three over-due coupons remain attached to these bonds the holder of the bonds can proceed to foreclose his mortgage and seize the canal. So the canal is really at the mercy of its business rival, the Balti-more and Ohio Railroad Company. What the disposition of the railroad more and Ohio Railroad Company.

What the disposition of the railroad company is toward the canal, whether friendly or otherwise, only the Baltimore and Ohio people know.

The West Virginia Railroad—Messrs. Eikins, Blaine and ex-Senator Davis-holds $100,000 worth of these same bonds, and the West Virginia is largely dependent on the canal. But so long as the canal is not in operation the B O. Company monopolizes the busi ness.

Another complication is the dependence of the Western Maryland Railroad on the canal. This road runs to Williamsport, on the canal, from Bultimore, and a large part of its business is hauling coal brought down from Cumberland to Williamsport on the canal. As, when the canal is in operation, this road competes with the B. & O., it would not be odd if this latter company should strangle it, baying the game would not be odd if this latter company should strangle it, having the game so completely in its hands as it has. Four of the coupons on the bonds held by the B. & O. are already over-due, and a fifth will be in a month or so. The canal is at the mercy of its only competing carrier.

The canal's rates are much lower than the railroad's. The canal tolls on a ten of coal from Cumberland to Georgetown are forty-four cents. The freight to boats is about seventy cents, making it cost about $1.14 to bring a ton of coal to Georgetown from Cumberland by canal. The railroad tariff is $1.25 per ton.

BABY M'KER IS BUSS.

CAPE MAY POINT, N. J., June 14.—
The army of mosquitoes that have been sharpening their bills in anticipation of feasting on Baby McKee suffered sore defeat last night. Their united strength would not enable them to burst through the tightly woven wire netting that screens every window of the Wanamaker cottage, and the invading hosts could do naught but sing a doleful ditty in the moonlight, cold and hungry and forlorn. The first baoy in the land in consequence woke up bright as a button, his merry face as fair as a speckless peach. Mrs. Wanamaker, Miss Lillian, Mrs. Lowry and Mr. Brown left for Philadelphia on the first morning train, leaving the Harrison party in entire possession, with Dr. Scott as the specially appointed "Lord of the Manor." But Baby McKee early assumed control of things, and at present writing still holds undisputed sway.

First of all he visited the beach and heard what the wild waves had to say. He and his sister, Mary Lodge McKee, were armed with bucket and shovel and He and his sister, Mary Lodge McKee, were armed with bucket and shovel and all other paraphernalla for the building of sand forts. Mrs. Harrison appeared on the piazza several times during the morning, and about noon she and the babies turned in for a nap.
